Furniture Now

A Sit-Down With a Prolific Designer

As founder of Japanese studio Nendo, Oki Sato designs countless products each year for brands such as Cappellini, Moroso, and Glas Italia. On the eve of the opening of his installation, 50 Manga Chairs, at Friedman Benda gallery in New York, Sato shares his thoughts on the state of the furniture industry and his mixed feelings about technology. dwell.com/oki-sato-interview

Design Milk

Modern Design Connoisseurs

Ten years ago, Jaime Derringer founded Design Milk, an online magazine that covers cutting-edge products, art, technology, and fashion. Today, the publication has a sister website dedicated to canines (and their design-minded owners), as well as an online shop for artful jewelry. On our new platform, Design Milk shares a curated selection of the site's product suggestions, house tours, graphic design favorites, and more. dwell.com/design-milk

Harrison Green

Oases in the Urban Jungle

Damien and Jacqueline Harrison, who head up the firm Harrison Green, create inviting landscapes in one of the least bucolic terrains: New York City. The studio designs lush private terraces and also takes on larger commissions, such as a rooftop installation at MoMA that features a pixel-like grid of cube planters. Other work by the firm includes luxury hospitality projects Baccarat Hotel & Residences and 1 Hotel Central Park. dwell.com/harrison-green

Kyra Clarkson Architect

A Canadian Firm Tackles Infill

In Toronto, Kyra Clarkson has built a niche business focusing on custom homes on urban infill lots. The architect previously worked at Tod Williams Billie Tsien Architects in New York City and established her eponymous firm in 2007. The practice's clean-lined residential designs are an elegant solution in a dense city. dwell.com/kyra-clarkson-architect
